Dennis A. Rondinelli : Development Projects as Policy Experiments: An Adaptive Approach to Development Administration (Development and Underdevelopment Series) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Development Projects as Policy Experiments: An Adaptive Approach to Development Administration (Development and Underdevelopment Series):

International assistance programmes for developing countries are in urgent need of revision. Continuous testing and verification is required if development activity is to cope effectively with the uncertainty and complexity of the development process. This examines the alternatives and offers an approach which focuses on strategic planning, administrative procedures that facilitate innovation, responsiveness and experimentation, and on decision-making processes that join learning with action. A useful text for academics and practitioners in development studies, geography and sociology.

." . . the best integration and summation of current wisdom' on the subject . . . represents a Magna Carta for practitioners."From the reviews of the first edition: -"Economic Geography About the AuthorDennis A. Rondinelli is Professor of Business Administration in the Kenan-Flagler Business School and Director of the International Private Enterprise Development Research Center at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.
